Our February begins with two aquatic creatures — and winds up with two very different takes on creating monsters! We start off with the classic 1950s sequel to Creature from the Black Lagoon — famed for it being presented by me in 3-D in the Chicago TV market years ago — with the transition from the Amazon to Florida for the Gill Man in Revenge of the Creature. Yes, this is the one with young Clint Eastwood making a brief appearance as a comedy relief lab assistant with a rat (hey, he's no Willard!) John Agar and John Bromfield battle the Creature, again played in underwater scenes by Ricou Browning. We follow that up with another 1950s menace from below the surface — The Monster That Challenged the World — in which an earthquake has opened a fissure in the ocean bed, from which emerges a group of huge prehistoric mollusk-type creatures (that resemble caterpillars, but, don't mind that) looking for food... especially the human kind. The cast includes cowboy star Tim Holt and "Dr. T" (of the 5000 fingers) himself, Hans Conreid.

We follow that up with a true classic that some consider one of the greatest of the Universal original horror films: Bride of Frankenstein. This 1935 film picks up just about exactly where the original Frankenstein ended — and we learn that, not only did Victor Frankenstein escape the devastation at the windmill, but so did the Monster (Boris Karloff!) The nightmare does not end for Victor (Colin Clive) due to the appearance of his old teacher, Dr. Pretorius (Ernest Thesiger, recently seen on our show as Horace Femm in The Old Dark House) who forces him to continue the work of creating a man, but the Monster has other ideas — he wants a woman! Elsa Lanchester plays the famous female creature — who became a film legend despite having only one film appearance as the Bride for a scant few minutes! Our month concludes with an American International favorite: How to Make a Monster — with a make-up man out for revenge on the studio bosses who are firing him by adding a mind-controlling substance into his monster make-up, creating real life deadly monsters! As we mentioned, this is the only film that starred both of America International’s successful teenage monsters — and, before people begin asking — no, we cannot get I Was a Teenage Werewolf and I Was a Teenage Frankenstein because the widow of one of the producers owns the films — and will not allow broadcast rights, so far.

Fun Stuff

"This is one Jim Kirk, 32 years old, wedded to a mighty starship. A five year excursion into the shadows of deep space. But how great is the cost of discovery? We're about to find out, by taking a voyage into the deep waters... of the Neutral Zone."
